

President Donald Trump has issued a stern warning to BRICS nations—Brazil, Russia, India, China, and South Africa—against efforts to replace the U.S. dollar as the global reserve currency.

He threatened to impose 100% tariffs on their exports to the United States if they pursue such actions.

In a statement, President Trump emphasized the importance of the U.S. dollar in international trade and finance, asserting that any attempts to undermine its status would be met with significant economic consequences. He urged BRICS countries to “find another sucker nation” if they intend to challenge the dollar’s dominance.

This development comes amid ongoing discussions within the BRICS bloc about creating an alternative currency system to reduce dependence on the U.S. dollar.

Such a move could have far-reaching implications for global trade dynamics and the international monetary system.

Analysts warn that imposing 100% tariffs could escalate trade tensions and potentially lead to a trade war, affecting global markets and economies. The situation remains fluid, with potential diplomatic negotiations on the horizon to address the concerns raised by both sides.
